ABLE ADDRESS ON "UNIVERSAL PEACE"

Hamilton Holt Makes Splendid Talk
In Chapel of K. W. C., Wednesday Night.

Hamilton Holt, managing editor of the Independent, and a man of international importance for his work in the interests of the peace movement, delivered the most able address on the peace movement ever heard in this city, Wednesday night, at K. W. C. Chapel.

Owing to the inclement weather only a small crowd attended the lecture.

In his address, known as the "Federation of the World," Mr. Holt pleads for a federation of the nations in somewhat the same manner that the states of the United States are joined. His idea is a substitution of law for war.

Mr. Holt declared himself for Taft for re-election to the presidency because of his work in the interests of peace. "Mr. Taft," he said, "has gone further than the head of any other nation in the movement for universal peace."

The speaker expressed doubt as to Roosevelt's sincerity in his advocacy of peace.

McCreary Hints

"James B. McCreary, the present Governor of Kentucky, introduced the first bill which created a world-wide conference for peace—the Pan-American Conference," he continued. Mr. Holt called attention to the good accomplished by the Hague Conference, one hundred disputes, which might have been cause for war, having been settled by it, in the last eight years.

Will Be Seen at The Lyric on Monday Afternoon and Night.—Miss Taliaferro Is Star.

Into the motion picture firmament has come a new star and one of the first magnitude. Out of the fellowship of continuous and brilliant success on the legitimate stage, Mabel Taliaferro has stepped lightly into the daintiest, sweetest and loveliest of pictures.

"Cinderella" — why everybody knows Cinderella; you heard the beautiful little story when you were a child. Your mother read it to you over and over again, until you could see it all whenever you closed your eyes. Then, almost before you knew it, you had grown up, and now you are telling it to your own children and wondering at the sweetness of a story that has power to interest you today almost as much as it did twenty or thirty years ago. Do not think that this picture, that Miss Taliaferro takes the leading part in, is for the children alone for it is for the "grown-ups" as well, for it is staged like grand opera and acted by stars.

Mr. Selig has surrounded Miss Taliaferro with an all-star company. Miss Greenwood takes the part of Cinderella's mother, while her father is played by Frank Weed; the wicked stepmother and two stepsisters are played by Lillian Leighton, Josephine Miller and Olive Cox, respectively. T. J. Carrigan (Miss Martha Russell's leading man) makes a most attractive Prince Charming, and Chas. Clary does splendidly as King Claudius; Adrienne Kroll as (Princess Yvette); Jessie Stevens as the Dowager; Geo. Cox as Secretary to King; Baby Griffin makes a most jolly and pleasing fairy godmother.

VIOLINIST'S HAND WORTH $50,000

Alex Skovgaard, The Famous Danish
Artist, Plays Instrument Valued at $13,000.

Alex Skovgaard (pronounced "Skowgar," with long "o" and broad "a") the famous Danish violinist, who is to give a concert in this city, has one of his hands insured for $50,000.

The wonderful Stradivarius violin upon which Skovgaard always plays is valued at $13,000. It has a most interesting and curious history, almost two hundred years old. Antonius Stradivarius, the greatest of violin makers, the secret of whose power has never been transmitted, fashioned the violin in 1712 in memory of his beloved son, and for years it lay on one side unstrung, silent. Then began the romance described in Skovgaard's little book, "The Story of My Violin," in which the great instrument was stolen from its maker in its native city of Cremona, Italy, and finally, after a series of adventures, was at last happily restored to the overjoyed Stradivarius.

When the great master craftsman died in 1737, the violin was purchased for a Spanish museum, and it remained there for one hundred and forty years as a wonderful specimen of the work of the greatest of violin makers until the museum in which it had reposed so long was burned to the ground and, as by a miracle, it was snatched from a fiery doom. Money not being forthcoming to rebuild the museum the violin, like a homeless wanderer, was sent to London, where Skovgaard saw it at a dealer's, immediately fell in love with it and determined that nothing should prevent him becoming the possessor of such a magnificent instrument. Soon after, it became his at a cost of fifty-two thousand marks ($13,000.00).

Although it had matured and seasoned with age, it never had been played upon, and was in as perfect condition as when it left the hands of its creator. It is thus not only one of the finest violin treasures of the world, but one of the best preserved. For years it has benefited by the many hours' daily playing of a master who possesses the key to its soul, and it is now worth vastly more than Skovgaard paid for it, and its value increases annually.

Good Water Pan for Pets

A good water pan for pets or poultry is a round, tin cake-pan, with a cone in the center, commonly known as a "Turk's head." A stick driven through the cone into the ground makes it impossible for an animal to overturn the pan.—Ladies' Home Journal.

EULOGY ON WASHINGTON

(Hebert H. Moore, of the local bar.)
Among the great men of the world whose names shine with a brilliant lustre in the galaxy of fame, there is one that seems to be a sun, around which the other flit as so many satellites.

We perceive them as they slowly arise, one by one, out of the waves of unrecognition, treading their trackless courses across the heavens, breaking through the cordons of envious opposition and lighting their environment with a brilliance dazzling to behold.

We stand in hushed amazement as they reach their respective zeniths, heights unapproached and seemingly unapproachable forever. As we stand in this admiring attitude, lost in the reveries of history, there beams o'er the western hills the rays from another light which bids fair to be the grandest of them all. As it looms above the horizon, we are struck with wonder at its amazing beauty. We see it as it majestically glides through the elements, dispelling the darkness as if by magic, coloring the landscape with its sparks of genius and pushing aside the obstacles in its pathway as it launches to its accented position, a position in the dome of fame far nobler, grander and loftier than was ever accorded another. As it swings to and fro in its home of sublimity, being safely anchored by the cords of renown, we recognize it to be the name so dear to every American heart and lover of liberty, George Washington. A name which raises in the mind the thought of all that is sublime, all that is noble, all that is illustrious in human nature.

Washington's preliminary education was secured while acting as a frontier surveyor. It was not of colleges and universities; not of arts and sciences; but of escapes and hardships with their lessons, of marches and battles with their victories and defeats; an education that was to prepare him to lead the tottering affairs of infant America through the swamps and cesspools of disaffection, around the crags of treason and over the cliffs of defeats to the smiling vales of freedom beyond.

At the time he was merging into young manhood the diplomatic relations between the English and French colonists were tightly strained. The cause of this stringency was the disputed ownership of the Ohio valley. The French were in possession of this territory and the English governor of Virginia desired to notify them by letter to vacate the lands.

Whom could he secure to carry the message? Who would dare face the trials and dangers of such a journey? Who would bid farewell to home and loved ones and start on a mission endangered by the tomahawk and scalping knife of the lurking savage; by rugged hills and raging streams; by icy winds and winter chills, with no guide but the sun by day and the stars by night? These questions were answered by the youthful Washington. He with that dauntless bravery which characterized his entire career offered himself as the messenger. Upon receiving his commission, he immediately starts on the perilous journey arriving in a few weeks at the French fort after having encountered hardships and dangers that would have cowered a less determined character. After receiving the French commander's reply, he starts on his return trip, arriving at the headquarters of the English, after an absence of two months.

The defiant reply of the French meant war, and for this the colonists began to prepare. The war that resulted was the French and Indian, and continued for a period of eight years. It was not barren of decisive results since the French, who at its commencement, held twenty of the twenty-five parts of the lands in America; at its close held but two insignificant islands south of Newfoundland.

Washington having demonstrated to the world his capabilities as a leader, returned to his Virginia home, desiring to remain in peaceful seclusion among the scenes he loved so well. But he was soon to be called forth again. The Fates decreed that he was the one to break the shackles of oppression from the limbs of young America and place her name upon the scroll of the nations of the earth.

The colonists were alarmed by the distant rumblings of the coming Revolution. The clouds of war began to gather in the Heavens, the thunder of battle re-echoed from Concord and the lightning of death protrudes its fiery tongue as the Americans fell on the grassy plains of Lexington. The people were enveloped in the throes of indecision, their footsteps were clogged with the crags of suspicion and they were beginning a journey the end of which they barely hoped to see. But at this time there appeared in the gloomy distance, flashing meteors of hope revolving around a spotless star and the despondent people recognized it to be Washington and his little band of valiant patriots.

Hope again entered the souls of men, confidence regained her lofty seat, enthusiasm beamed from every eye, and opportunity pointed with a wistful glance toward the beckoning fields of liberty.

The victories of Washington and his little band during the years of this Revolution have reached the very summits of military annals and now bask in undimmed splendor with those of Alexander at Arbela; Miltiades at Marathon; Hannibal at Canae; and Napoleon at Austerlitz.

At different periods of the war success seemed to have deserted our heroes; repeated defeats almost weighed them down; the darkening cloud of subjection was wont to be their canopy, and with hope dead and memory but a pang they began to fear their destiny. But throughout this reign of consternation, when the ship of American independence was trembling in the storm, when the legions of Britain were thundering against its sides, when the lightning like glances of monarchy were hissing through its sails, Washington was at the helm and with determination on his brow, with liberty burning in his soul, with a prayer to Heaven on his lips, he guides her safely through.

After serving the nation his genius had fostered as president for eight years and by his sagacious statesmanship starting her along the road of unparalleled prosperity which has continued through the storms of more than a century, he again returned to his Virginia home. But he was destined soon to be called forth again not to service but to the rewards of his Maker. Having contracted a severe cold riding on his farm, he believed it would prove fatal, and so prepared for the final summons.

When at last the rumblings of death were increasing in volume, when the shadows of his life had touched the eve of day, when the star of his existence had dropped from the Heavens, his spirit took on its journey through the lands of perpetual bliss. So perished America's greatest hero.

Washington's fame has touched the sounding board of time and will re-echo forever, it has climbed the pinnacle of greatness and will shine throughout eternity, it has soared on the wings of truth and now fans the realms of immortality, but the place where it shall most securely rest, unmoved by the storms that agitate the world, is in the unmeasured love of his fellow-countrymen.

Monuments, noble structures of man, seek to distinguish his exalted name. Bronze statues and marble shafts vie with each other in the splendor they give his achievements. Eulogies and panegyrics, the fair-

GEORGE WASHINGTON

George Washington, the man whose birth we celebrate today, was born in West Moreland county, Virginia, 180 years ago today, February 22, 1732. He was the son of Augustine Washington and his second wife, Mary Ball. His grandfather, John Washington was Mayor of Northampton, England.

The Washington family were royalists and fled from the dreaded Cromwell. George's father died when he was but 12 years old. He was brought up by his mother, who also superintended his education. Her fitness to train him is well attested by the man himself.

At the age of 13 he wrote one hundred and ten maxims to be his guide of conduct through life. George was commissioned midshipman but refused the place because of the disapproval of his mother.

After this he spent much time with his brother, Lawrence, and with Lord Fairfax, who owned large estates in Virginia. In 1748, he began a survey of these estates. He was in peril from the rifles of Indians and "squatters" throughout the time he was employed. During the seven years war at the age of 19 he was appointed Adjutant with rank of Major.

Soon after this he made the only sea voyage of his life with his brother, Lawrence, to the Barbadoes. Not long after this trip his brother died.

In 1754, at the age of 22, Washington commanded a regiment against the French. He was with Braddock when he was ambushed July 9, 1755. During the battle four bullets passed through his clothes and two horses were killed under him but he escaped. It is a peculiar fact that Washington never received a wound in battle.

He married Mrs. Martha Curtis, a wealthy widow in 1759.

He now resigned his military commissions and improved his estates. Wheat and tobacco were raised. He also ran brick yards and fisheries. At his death, he held 124 slaves which according to his will were to be freed at the death of his wife which occurred three years later. His object in this was to prevent those that had married from being separated.

For several years Washington was a member of the Virginia Assembly. Like many of the Southern plantation owners he was opposed to independence but was ready to fight for the constitutional rights of the colonists. Soon after the news of the battle of Lexington, Washington was appointed Commander in Chief of the American forces. He hastened to the camp at Cambridge and took command under the famous elm tree. He now compelled the evacuation of Boston but was driven from New York and retreated across New Jersey.

No General has showed better generalship than did Washington. He always shared the hardships of his men and would not accept pay. He, however, kept account of his personal expenses which were reimbursed by Congress.

Under circumstances that would have quelled a less ardent spirit Washington carried out his campaigns. From the evacuation of Boston to the surrender of Yorktown he was in need of men and supplies and beset by the cabals of other officers.

By the aid of powerful allies, however, he brought the revolution to a happy close.

He now retired to Mount Vernon which he had visited but once in 8 years. He visited his West Virginia possessions and planned the Potomac and James river canals, and endowed Washington College at Lexington, Virginia, for a University.

Washington proposed commercial conventions which led to the constitutional convention in 1787. He was president of the convention and said the constitution was the only safe guard against anarchy and civil war. He was inaugurated President of the United States in New York City, April 30, 1789.

Washington was six feet two inches high, had brown hair and blue eyes, a large head and a strong arm. He was a graceful horseman and a skillful hunter. His demeanor was grave and his judgment was sound.

He and "Lady Washington" as she was styled, presided over a court much more formal and stately than we have today.

He served two terms issuing his farewell address in 1796.

He now retired to Mount Vernon, but his rest was of short duration. When troubles arose with France he was again called to the command of the American army. In December, 1799, he was much exposed. Contracting acute laryngitis, he gradually sank until his death, December 14, 1799.

Among his last words were these: "I die hard, but I am not afraid to go." Giving some directions to his clerk about his burial he placed his hand upon his own pulse and passed to the great beyond without a struggle.

Thus passed away the man God had left fatherless that his country might call him Father.

One day I met a maiden fair,
With golden locks beyond compare;
I wrote an ode upon her hair,
Enthralled quite by her tresses rare.
I lost my heart, but didn't care.
I called one fatal morning where
She lived, to lay my secret bare,
All unannounced by trumpets blare.
To go again I'd never dare,
For when I met her on the stair
Her charming tresses were not there;
She'd left them hanging on a chair,
Somewhere.

Delightful Dance

The Washington Birthday dance given by the young men of the city at the Auditorium Wednesday evening was the source of much pleasure and enjoyment.

The music was furnished by Saxton and Trost's Orchestra, of Lexington.

From the first dance, which opened with the alluring strains of "O, You Beautiful Doll," to the last echo of "Home, Sweet Home," the floor was covered with beautifully gowned maidens and stalwart gentlemen, swaying gracefully to the music.

The dance extended to the wee small hours of the morning.

Among the out-of-town guests were: Miss Letitia Warren, of Danville; Mr. Graham Young and Mr. Sledd, of North Middletown; Mr. Wilmet Prewitt, of Mt. Sterling; Mr. Cox, of Lexington; Messrs. John Day and Clifford Hagemeyer, of State College; Miss Bessie Byrd, of Lexington; Mr. Jason Redmond, of Paris; Mr. Bryan Ballard, of Lexington; Mr. Joe Davis, of Paris; Mr. Wm. Evans, of Richmond; Mr. Harrison Scott, of Lexington; Mr. Gifford Brock, of Epperson School House; Misses Catherine Withers, of Lexington; Jessie Bundren, of Lexington; Annitta Carranza, of Spain, and Ruth Scott, of Lexington.

EIGHT DEAD IN GREAT TORNADO

Wind Storm Sweeps Through Outskirts of Shreveport, Destroying Life and Property.—Other Towns Hit.

Shreveport, La., Feb. 22.—Eight persons are dead and about fifty injured as the result of a tornado which swept through the Western suburb of Shreveport late Tuesday. All the dead are negroes with the exception of the two months old baby of A. J. Manheim, whose home was demolished.

The baby's body was found a block from the Manheim residence. A number of negro cabins were destroyed in the outskirts of the city and on the nearby plantations.

The tornado approached Shreveport from the Southwest, sweeping a path through two negro quarters and crossing Red river, struck two plantations where negro cabins, barns and outhouses were destroyed. In the city proper no damage was done.

The House voted down the Asher amendment almost unanimously, and the substitute bill was placed upon its passage. It was adopted, seventy-six to nothing. It is understood the Senate will accept the bill.

The House demonstrated that it is not favorable to bi-partisan measures by striking from the Senate Bill creating the Department of Fanning that section which provides that the Deputy Bank Commissioner shall be of the opposite political party to the Bank Commissioner. With this section stricken out the bill passed the House sixty to nothing, every Republican present voting for the bill.

The Corrupt Practices Act of Representative Hamilton was being discussed by the House when the House adjourned. It will be the first thing taken up Friday.

The Newcomb Automobile bill was being debated again Wednesday when the Senate adjourned and will be the first thing taken up when the Senate convenes Friday. Both Houses adjourned over Thursday on account of Washington's birthday.

Governor Has County Unit Bill

The House by a vote of 66 to 22 passed the Graham County Unit Local Option Extension bill and it now goes to the Governor for approval. This is the first platform measure to be enacted into law.

DIRECT PRIMARY BILL PASSES HOUSE

Frankfort, Ky., Feb. 22.—The direct primary bill passed the House Wednesday without a dissenting vote. The bill, as amended, carries an emergency clause and when passed by the Senate will have an important bearing on the Congressional primary in the Seventh District.

The bill also contains a provision for the appointment of election officers that safeguards candidates from unfair treatment by party committees and election boards.

No Fixing Election Officers

An amendment which was put in the bill provides that twenty-five per cent of the candidates may unite and compel the committees to appoint one election officer of their selection in each precinct and that fifty per cent of the candidates may get two officers, and by writ of mandamus, in peremptory proceedings, the selection of these officers may be enforced.

These are the important provisions that were contained in the Thompson bill that passed the House, and for which Mr. Thompson stood out in the joint conference.

Thompson Explains Bill.

When the Eaton Primary Bill passed by the Senate came up in the House as a special order, Representative Charlton Thompson, author of the House primary bill, explained the provisions of the substitute bill agreed on by himself and Senator Eaton.

Mr. Asher, of Bell, sent up an amendment intended to include the selection of presidential delegates in the bill. Mr. Asher is a Republican. He spoke at length, urging that all National elections should be included.

Asher Amendment Rejected

E. B. Thompson, of the Republican side, followed Mr. Asher, declaring that the majority of the Republican Representatives were against including the presidential race in the bill.
